Donald C. Rowley, president of Rowley Publications and publisher of The Telegraph, was one of 760 persons who participated this week in the 15th annual global strategy discussions held at the U.S. Naval War College in Newport, R. I.

According to the Public Information Office of the Fourth Naval District at Philadelphia, Mr. Rowley is one of 125 prominent civilians and active duty and retired flag and general officers who are participating as guests of the secretary of the Navy.

5 Lectures are Highlight

Highlighting the week-long program are five related lectures, each given by a recognized authority in his particular field. Global strategy speakers this year include the Hon. U. Alexis Johnson, deputy under secretary of state for political affairs; Lyman Kirkpatrick, deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency, Vice Adm. Bernard L. Austin, U. N. Naval War College president; Prof. Edward S. Mason of Harvard University, and the Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson, ambassador and permanent representative of the U.S. to the United Nations. Selected citizens from American business, industry, labor, finance, education, the bar, the press, the clergy, the government, and the armed forces are attending the discussions.

The aim of the annual discussions is to further an understanding of the problems confronting the United States in formulating a global strategy to attain our national objectives.

In addition, 100 senior reserve Naval, Marine Corps and Coast Guard officers now undergoing two weeks annual training at the Naval War College are participating. Staff and student officers of the College's Naval Warfare and Command and Staff courses complete the participants.

The guests are being berthed aboard the cruiser USS Newport News, the carrier USS Essex and the destroyer tender USS Cascade.
